

Wondering about our mystical world

Janine Lees-Moorhouse

Volume 8

Issue 1

Spring 2025

Citation Link

We are here now.
Spinning in, spinning out.
Love is the wonder.
Standing among ... our elders ancient voices...
Clashes with all I think I really know
Contemporary knowing
Spirituality knowing
Infinite feeling, loving, curiosity, appreciation.
A moving together as bats do - huddling in a cave,
ready to fly free;
not only creating a spectacle, but a generative unity and a being.
Ancient and contemporary, moving together
like the moon and the tide.
Sometimes this is in their connection,
sometimes it is in a stillness of the slack tide.
Separate, but together - that's our murmururation.
Journey to new worlds carry the seeds of our growth.
Following the river through a valley, brings beauty and awe.
The human soul flows through the moving water running through the very heart of the valley.
We know there is a logical beginning and an end
– whilst we've lost count of the pathways vacillating to and fro.
But we are here now!
Listening, experiencing, learning, adjusting.
Light, shadow, sound and then the magical.
Moments of the cascade,
the babble, the flash of colour,
the acrobatics of a brown trout.
It's the shape of the flow.
It compels us, to carry on
Yes, because we are here now.
Flow includes our ancestors along with us now.
Let's meet together as the flow converges,
let's step into love, uniqueness, growth and being alongside.
We're here now.
Yes.... We are here now.

Author

Janine Lees-Moorhouse is a part time independent systemic family therapist. She is passionate about social justice, valuing difference and working within collaborative relationships. She enjoys sharing space with other people, plus the fauna and flora in the natural world. Janine is often found with a camera in hand capturing the beauty of the natural, world or portraits of family and friends.

Citation

Lees-Moorhouse, Janine (2025). Wondering about our mystical world. Murmurations: Journal of Transformative Systemic Practice, 8(1), 87-88. <https://doi.org/10.28963/8.1.15>